

I am strongly opposed to the FCC implementing a proposal to lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections. Such soliciting types of telephone calls made to our home were an intrusion to say the least. It was difficult enough for me and my husband to receive these calls, but even worse that our children were subjected to them. I felt so invaded in my own home and quite often was hesitant to even answer the telephone. We stopped answering the telephone during dinner hours and often became so frustrated when, after rushing to the telephone, discovering it was a solicitor (and we are patient people). I imagine this could affect many people's stress levels if it were allowed to continue. We all know how built up stress in the home in turn affects neighbors, co-workers, and in the larger picture, society. We have gone from at times receiving 5 or so calls per evening to zero calls (and this is only a 4-hour span). We had received calls after 10:00 p.m. while in bed. Please, please do not even consider an act that would diminish the protections we receive from Indiana's Telephone Privacy law.
